"Trafficking: A Memoir of an Undercover Game Warden" is a suspenseful, true account of Mr. Latham’s first case as an undercover game warden. Tony shares his experience of taking on the persona of a fisherman/hunter named Tony Henderson, whose ethics and intentions can be described as questionable. Tony describes his encounters with crooked, suspicious characters who bring truth to the quote, “a man is known by the company he keeps.”

Opposite of his factual memoir, "Five Fingers," is a fictional story that is set in central Idaho and depicts a game warden who is working toward unveiling the person responsible for illegally shooting numerous deer, and abandoning them in the snow. In addition to dealing with both an indifferent prosecutor and a suspicious deputy, the game warden suspects that the shooter is responsible for recent human-related crimes.
